Coolidge Takes Oath As President Harding Funeral At Marion Tomorrow

Nation Mourns Sudden Passing Away of Chief Executive While in San Francisco.

NO CHANGE IN POLICIES

President Warren G. Harding is dead. Vice President Calvin Coolidge has become President. Dramatic in their suddenness and nation-wide in significance, events have moved with startling rapidity in the past week. With the nation plunged into sorrow, and the death of the President coming at a time when the world seems treading on a narrow borderline between the orderliness of conservatism and the confusion of radicalism, the new President has taken hold of the reins of state with a firm hand and a determination of purpose that have inspired confidence upon all sides.

Just when the public had begun to feel confident that President Harding had passed the danger point in his illness from pneumonia which overtook him while he was in San Francisco, death claimed him last Thursday night. The end came swiftly and without warning. His physicians had but few hours earlier issued a bulletin predicting his complete recovery. Mrs. Harding was seated at his bedside reading to him, while two nurses kept vigil in the room. A slight shudder passed through the President's body. He was dead. The physicians called it a stroke of apoplexy. His death occurred at 7.30 California time, or 10.30 Pennsylvania time. President Harding was but 58 years old. He paid the penalty of the strain of public life. His system had become weakened by overwork and worry. A 7500 mile speaking trip through the great west had further sapped his vitality. When illness overtook him the necessary reserve power was lacking, and the end came with a swiftness that fairly stunned the world.

Calvin Coolidge was sleeping in the farm home of his father at Plymouth, Vermont, when a messenger arrived there on foot late Thursday night to announce the death of President Harding. The whole life and career of Coolidge has been one of direct, decisive action. Within a few minutes he had received official confirmation of the passing of the President. Under the constitution the Vice President automatically becomes the President. The one formality is subscribing to the oath of office. John C. Coolidge, the new President's father, is 78 years old, and a justice of the peace. The father and son and the latter's wife arose from their beds, dressed and descended to a simply furnished room on the first floor of the farm-house. There, by dim lamp-light, the son, Calvin, subscribed to the oath of office of President of the United States, as administered to him by his father and witnessed by his wife. The aged father's voice trembled as he read the words which were repeated in a clear, calm voice by the son:

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of the President of the United States and I will to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States."

And to the foregoing oath, Calvin Coolidge added amid a silence that was intense:

"So help me God."

While in San Francisco plans were being made for bringing the body of President Harding home for burial, the new President was hurriedly shaping up things for an immediate start to Washington to assume control of the reins of government. Arriving there late Friday night he made this direct, frank announcement:

"The world has lost a great and good man. I mourn his loss. He was my chief and my friend. It will be my purpose to carry out the policies which he has begun for the service of the American people and for meeting their responsibilities wherever they may arise. For this purpose I shall seek the co-operation of all those who have been associated with the President during his term of office. Those who have given their efforts to assist him I wish to remain in office that they may assist me. I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation."

The new President and Mrs. Coolidge established official quarters in the New Willard Hotel, in Washington, which will be the temporary offices of the government until the White House is made ready for them. With a large place in their hearts and thoughts for the bereaved widow, the new President and Mrs. Coolidge telegraphed Mrs. Harding in California that they would be glad to have her consider the White House her home as long as they might reside there.

President Harding's body will be laid at rest at his home town of Marion, Ohio, tomorrow. The funeral train which left San Francisco late Friday night arrived in Washington on Tuesday. There the President's body was met and taken to the White House by a procession headed by the new President, Justices of the Supreme Court, General Pershing, cabinet officials and others. Wednesday morning the body was taken to the Capitol where it lay in state in the rotunda and where it was viewed by many thousands of persons. As the funeral cortege moved to the Capitol ten thousand school children scattered flowers along the street. A children's chorus sang hymns that were favorites with the deceased President.

One of the first official acts of the new President was to issue a proclamation designating tomorrow, August 10th, the date for the President's funeral at Marion, as a day for prayer throughout the United States. This proclamation was as follows:

To the people of the United States:

In the inscrutable wisdom of Divine Providence, Warren Gamaliel Harding, twenty-ninth President of the United States, has been taken from us. The nation has lost a wise and enlightened statesman, and the American people a true friend and counsellor, whose whole public life was inspired with the desire to promote the best interests of the United States and the welfare of all its citizens. His private life was marked by gentleness and brotherly sympathy, and by the charm of his personality he made friends of all who came in contact with him.

It is meet that the deep grief which fills the hearts of the American people should find fitting expression.

Now, therefore, I Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, do appoint Friday next, August 10, the day on which the body of the dead President will be laid in its last earthly resting-place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of Divine worship; there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full heart the homage and love and reverence to the memory of the great and good President, whose death has so sorely smitten the nation.

In witness I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the fourth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-eighth.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

By the President,
CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

The White House, Washington, August 4, 1923.

The new President and Mrs. Coolidge will be among those who will go to Marion tomorrow for the final services at the Harding plot in the home-town cemetery.

THE NEW PRESIDENT

Calvin Coolidge, who becomes President of the United States through the death of President Warren G. Harding, entered the public service almost immediately upon leaving college.

First elected a member of the city council of Northampton, Mass., the city which had been his home since he became a voter, he progressed steadily upward through the offices of city solicitor, mayor, membership in the house of representatives and of the senate of Massachusetts, serving as president of the latter body, and then as a lieutenant governor until elected governor and in 1920 vice president of the United States.

In the more than twenty years he gave to these duties his time was almost exclusively devoted to the problems of public affairs. Only incidentally did he turn to the law, although he always maintained an office with an associate at Northampton.

He was born in the village of Plymouth, Vt., on July 4, 1872, of Puritan ancestors who came to this country and settled in Watertown, Mass., in 1630.

He left the farm in 1891 for Amherst college and graduated with honors in 1895. Immediately upon leaving college he went to Northampton to study law and finally settled there.

It was Mr. Coolidge's common sense, his insight into legislative tactics and his mentality which first attracted to him the attention of political leaders. The late Senator W. Murray Crane, who was a resident of Coolidge's congressional district, was among the first to note these qualities and he resolved to utilize the first opportunity to project Mr. Coolidge into the national political arena.

By hard work and steady progress Mr. Coolidge continued his rise until he could be considered for high state office and then it was that Senator Crane and other leaders exerted their powers to have him nominated for the lieutenant governorship. He was elected in the first campaign won by the Republicans in Massachusetts for several years, due to the Progressive party split. Thereafter it was but logical for him to succeed to the governorship, an office which he held for two terms and which he left for the vice presidency.

The dramatic events of the Boston police strike, in which the governor took a firm and unyielding stand for law and order, focussed upon him in 1919 national attention and made of him almost overnight a national figure. For a while he was talked of prominently as a presidential possibility.

As vice president he became a regular attendant at the President's cabinet meetings, a custom established for the first time in his case.

Mr. Coolidge married Miss Grace Goodhue, whom he first met in Northampton as a teacher, in 1905, and they have two sons.

ORDER OF SUCCESSION

Under our form of federal government, a new Vice President is not chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the advancement of Mr. Coolidge to the office of President. As Vice President, Mr. Coolidge was president of the United State Senate. A new president of that body will have to be chosen by a majority vote of the members. Should Mr. Coolidge resign or die before serving out the unexpired term of President Harding, the new President would be the Secretary of State, a post now held by Charles E. Hughes, who was defeated for the presidency by Woodrow Wilson.

MILLERS ELECT OFFICERS

C. Y. Wagner, of Bellefonte, President of New Association.

Twenty-four millers from Centre, Clinton and Lycoming counties organized the Central Penna. Millers' Association, at a meeting held last week at Lock Haven. Officers elected are: C. Y. Wagner, Bellefonte, president; E. S. Furst, Mill Hall, vice president; W. D. Rosch, Bellefonte, secretary.

Lock Haven being regarded as the most central point in the district, it is proposed having the several meetings of the association held at that place. The association has been organized as a supplement to the Susquehanna Millers' Association. Similar organizations of millers are being formed at various points throughout the State.

DeMolay Activities.

The Penn-Centre Chapter, Order of DeMolay, band of 22 pieces, will appear in public for the first time on Aug. 23 at a big Masonic picnic at Curwensville. The first band uniforms will be DeMolay caps, dark sack coats and white trousers, but later it is planned to have full Turkish patrol uniforms. At the last meeting, 16 petitions for the degrees and membership were elected and many new ones received. Regular meetings are held the second and fourth Tuesdays in the Bush Arcade. The next big ceremonial will be held in the fourth week of August when it is expected that a class of 40 will take degrees.

Destroyed Expensive Banner.

An expensive banner sign placed on the Glenn wagon on Water St. by G. W. Rees, one of the aspiring candidates for Register of Centre County, was destroyed on Monday night. It seems like a mean trick and Mr. Rees says he will have another banner put up, with a standing reward of $5 to be paid to informant in case the sign is tampered with in the future.

Little Girl Shot by Target Gun.

Miss Pearl Sharp, 11 years old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Conce Sharp, of Lyonstown, was accidentally shot by a 22-calibre target rifle on Monday and admitted to the local hospital for treatment. The shot struck her on the left arm, but fortunately did not seriously wound her.

Troop Horses Back.

The Bellefonte Troop horses arrived in Bellefonte via the L. & T. on Tuesday evening.

DESPERATE PRISONERS IN DEATH HOUSE CELLS

Put in Safe Place After Third Attempt to Escape From Jail.

REPULSED BY SHERIFF

Sheriff Harry Dukeman and one of his trusties, Timco Kapeluch, of Oscela Mills, were injured in a near riot at the jail last Thursday, Kapeluch seriously. Sheriff Dukeman had a cut on his head that required one stitch to close, was bruised over the right shoulder and had three ribs on his right side cracked by blows with an iron bar inflicted by Clair Jamison, when Mrs. Dukeman came to her husband's aid and wrenched the bar from Jamison's hand. Kapeluch was taken to the hospital and has since been improving nicely.

Kapeluch was given a terrible beating by Arthur Price and Ed. Fiddell, two of the three prisoners who have been in the Centre County jail for several weeks since their capture after they had escaped from Rockview. He was pounded with an iron bar when he interfered with the attempted jail delivery by Price and his companions.

The three desperate convicts made a third unsuccessful attempt to break jail late Friday night. A kitchen knife, which they had secreted in their cell, was made into a hack-saw. With this they cut several bolts to release a steel plate in the ceiling of the cell. They had made an opening nearly large enough for them to crawl through when discovered. Several "trusties" among the other prisoners tripped off the Sheriff in time to frustrate the scheme.

Saturday night, at Sheriff Dukeman's request, the three convicts were removed to cells in the death house at Rockview for safe keeping. They will be held there until called for trial in Bellefonte at the September term of court.

As a reward for their assistance to Sheriff Dukeman, the "trusties," Kapeluch and Tarbay, have been paroled by Judge Quigley.

Jamison seemed to be the most active of the trio in the attempt to escape on Thursday and was the only one to get into the Sheriff's home. Jamison got into the corridor by pushing Miss Marion Dukeman aside at the noon hour when she and two trusties—Kapeluch and George Tarbay—were taking dinner to the prisoners. Kapeluch and Tarbay saw the other escaped convicts, each armed with an iron bar, start toward the door, but began throwing dishes and stopped them until Mrs. Dukeman reached the scene and locked the door.

Sheriff Dukeman who was nearby and heard his daughter scream, ran into the corridor. As he blocked the path of Jamison, the prisoner yelled, "Don't you touch me; don't dare touch me." Realizing the necessity of quick and decisive action, Sheriff Dukeman closed in, only to get a wicked rap over the head with the iron bar.

Sheriff Dukeman was dazed for an instant, but grappled with Jamison and soon had the better of him, giving him a deserved mauling in which he injured his fist more than his head had been hurt by the prisoner's blow.

While the scuffle was in progress, Miss Dukeman rushed to the front office and secured a loaded revolver which she fired in an effort to frighten the prisoner. She said: "I'd have shot Jamison if it hadn't been that I was afraid I might hit father."

As soon as the Sheriff had the prisoners in locked cells, a physician was summoned and Kapeluch was taken to the local hospital, his condition being regarded as serious.

The prisoners had in some manner secured a hack saw with which they cut and broke from their beds the three pieces of iron with which they armed themselves. The locks on their cells were broken, perhaps by one of the other prisoners given liberty in the corridor, which makes the matter look as though a wholesale jail delivery had been planned.

While the trusties—Kapeluch and Tarbay—were being beaten by Price and Fiddell, most of the other prisoners stood by with arms folded, it is alleged, and this proved very much of a surprise to the Dukeman family for they had tried to treat all prisoners fairly, making them as comfortable as possible under existing conditions.

FOUND CHILD IN MOUNTAINS

Wilmer Andrews, 2, of Pine Grove Mills, Strayed Away.

Wilmer Andrews, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Andrews, tenants on the A. C. Kepler farm, 2 miles west of Pine Grove Mills, was found in the mountains about 1½ miles from his home on Tuesday evening.

The child had been playing about the home early in the morning and strayed away, becoming lost. When his mother discovered the boy was missing, District Attorney Furst, at Bellefonte, was notified, and searching parties began a search of the countryside. As hours passed and no trace of the youngster could be found, wild stories were circulated, one telling of how he was possibly kidnapped, a party of cherry pickers having heard the child's screams as an auto went by.

State police were called and arrangements were being made to put bloodhounds on the trail when the child was found.

One member of a searching party had just passed a bush and was followed by another member. The first saw nothing about the bush, but the second noticed it move. An investigation revealed the boy, his light curly hair disheveled, none the worse apparently for his experience.

CHANGE REUNION LOCATION

Popular Annual Williams Gathering to be at Port Matilda.

The popular annual Williams re-union, which had been scheduled for the Miles grove at Martha, will be held this year on Saturday, August 18th, at Port Matilda in the splendid park at that place. Everybody contemplating attending the reunion will keep that fact in mind.

Originally it was intended holding this year's celebration at the Miles grove in Martha, which has been the custom for a long time past. The committee in charge of the reunion and picnic feel that the public should be informed as to the reason for the sudden change in location. The representative of the Miles grove asked a rental fee of $100 for the day. The committee offered to pay as rent the highest amount offered for concessions, such as ice cream stands, etc. The highest bid was $80, which amount, the committee explained, was offered for the grove for the day, but which was not accepted. With this situation confronting them, the committee state, they were compelled to make the change from Martha to Port Matilda. Everybody is cordially invited with a good time assured to all.

The state police arrested Mrs. Elizabeth Rosenthal, a sister-in-law of Max, on Saturday, confiscated a Jordan sedan she was driving and 108 quarts of whiskey it concealed. Mrs. Rosenthal furnished $2,000 bail. A Cadillac coupe McLaughlin was driving was also confiscated with 156 bottles of whiskey, spoken of as "choice goods."

Sketch of President Warren G. Harding's Life

Warren Gamaliel Harding, twenty-ninth president of the United States, was born November 2, 1865, on his grandfather's farm just outside the village of Blooming Grove, in Morrow county, Ohio. He was descended from two pioneer American families, hardy Holland Dutch on the one side and liberty-loving Scotch on the other. His father, Dr. George T. Harding, is still a practicing physician in Marion, O., despite his advanced age of seventy-nine years. His mother was Phoebe Elizabeth Dickerson Harding.

Mr. Harding was a self-made man in the best sense of the phrase. He worked on his grandfather's farm and attended the village school until he was fourteen years old, and then he entered the Ohio Central college at Iberia. He worked his way through that institution by cutting corn, painting his neighbors' barns and helping on the grading of the roadbed of the T. & O. C. railroad. He also played in the village band and was editor of the college paper.

When he graduated from the college, Warren went to work in the village printing office. At the time he was nineteen years old, his father moved to Marion with the family and there aided Warren financially in gaining control of the Marion Star, of which he was publisher until after he assumtd the office of president of the United States. Already he knew how to set type and to do all the other duties of a printer, and when the linotype was introduced he learned to operate that machine. Always he carried as a pocket piece the printer's rule he used in those days.

The Star was his idol and he was very proud of it and of the more than friendly relations that existed between him and his employees. There was never a strike on the paper, and about fourteen years ago he instituted a profit-sharing plan whereby the employees received dividends that were paid them in the form of stock in the paper. Mr. Harding was identified also with the industries that sprang up in Marion as it grew from a town of 4,000 to a city of more than 30,000. He was a director in a bank and in several manufacturing companies, and was a trustee of Trinity Baptist church.

His Rise in Politics.

As editor and publisher of a lively Republican paper it was inevitable that Mr. Harding should take an active interest in politics, and his attainments brought him to the front in the state. He was a member of the Ohio senate from 1900 to 1904, and then served as lieutenant governor of the state. In 1910 he was the Republican nominee for governor, but was defeated. In 1915 he was sent to the United States senate, serving until 1920, when he resigned to make the campaign for the presidency. In the preconvention campaign that year he had been looked on as one of the possible nominees for the high office, but his defeat in the primaries for election of delegates from Ohio seemed to spoil his chances. However, the conservative leaders of the Republican party prevailed in the gathering in the Chicago Coliseum, and Mr. Harding was nominated. His campaign was based largely on opposition to American participation in the League of Nations, and was so successful that in the election of November 4 he received 404 electoral votes to 127 for James M. Cox, the Democratic nominee. He was inaugurated March 4, 1921, with a degree of simplicity in the ceremonies that pleased the American people.

Classed, when in the senate, as a conservative, President Harding did not depart markedly from conservative lines when in the White House, though his supporters always said he was as progressive as the good of the country warranted and as conditions permitted. He, like President Roosevelt, had a great coal miners' strike on his hands, and labored hard and with a measure of success to bring it to a peaceful and just end.

Arms Limitation Conference.

The outstanding accomplishment of his administration was the great international conference for the limitation of armament held in Washington, opening on Armistice day, November 11, 1921. At his instigation the conference was authorized by congress and after feeling out the big powers and finding them agreeable he issued invitations to Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Japan, China, the Netherlands and Portugal. Each country sent some of its most eminent statesmen as delegates, those of the United States being Secretary of State Hughes, chairman of the conference; Senators Lodge of Massachusetts and Underwood of Alabama, and ex-Secretary of State Elihu Root.

The conference adjourned February 6, 1922, after negotiating these treaties:

A covenant of limitation to naval armament between the United States, Great Britain, France, Japan and Italy.

A treaty between the same powers as to the use of submarines and noxious gases in warfare.

A treaty between the United States, Great Britain, France and Japan relating to their insular possessions and their insular dominions in the Pacific, with a declaration reserving American rights in mandated territory.

A treaty between the nine powers in the conference relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China.

A treaty between the nine powers relating to Chinese customs tariff. Because France refused to consider the limitation of land armament at the present time, that part of the conference fell through. But what it did achieve was considered a great step toward the attainment of world peace. The treaties were soon ratified by the United States senate and the British parliament, and the other nations followed suit, though for a long time it was feared France would not accept the pacts. However, President Harding lived to see them ratified by the French chamber and senate.

Favored Entering World Court.

Mr. Harding had not been long in the White House before it appeared that he did not favor entire isolation of the United States from European affairs, but believed this country would have to do its part in the restoration of Europe to peace and stability. This feeling became more evident early in 1923 when he proposed that America should accept membership in the International Court of Justice which had been founded under the auspices of the League of Nations. The President was as insistent as ever that this country should keep out of the league, but believed the court was or would be independent of the greater organization. Against the advice of some leaders of his party, he reiterated this advice on several occasions, and his plan formed the subject of some of his addresses on his last and fatal trip through the West. He did not think it would split his party, and boldly continued to advocate it. Notwithstanding this, it was assumed to be almost a certainty that President Harding would be renominated in the Republican national convention of 1924.

Mr. Harding's home life was ideal save that he had no children. He and Mrs. Harding, who was Miss Florence Kling of Marion, were devoted to each other and she was always his true helpmate, both in Ohio and in Washington. In the national capital Mrs. Harding quickly made herself loved by all with whom she came in contact, and during the Western trip she was more eager even than the President to meet and mix with all kinds of people.

His Western Trip.

President Harding's Alaska trip was originally planned for the summer of 1922. He inherited the so-called "Alaska problem." Alaska seemed to be on the down grade, with decrease in population and mining output, threatened extinction of the fishing industry and numerous other unfavorable symptoms. The situation apparently called for the establishment of a definite Alaskan policy. Various plans were discussed, including a transfer of control to the Interior department from the score or more of governing bureaus. President Harding's plans for 1922 came to naught, but this year he determined to get first-hand information. He was accompanied by Secretary Work of the Interior department, Secretary Wallace of the Agricultural department and Secretary Hoover of the Department of Commerce, all of whom are immediately concerned in the Alaskan situation.

Mrs. Warren G. Harding.

The President left Washington at the end of June and journeyed leisurely to the Pacific Northwest by special train, making speeches at St. Louis, Denver, Helena, Spokane and other cities. Incidentally he visited two of the national parks. First he went to Zion in Utah, the newest of our national parks, which is a many-colored gorge cut by the Rio Virgin. Next he visited Yellowstone in Wyoming, created in 1872, the first national park in history and largest and most famous of the nineteen parks of our system. Here he motored, boated, fished, fed the bears and had a good time. His plans also included a visit to Yosemite upon his return trip, but that was abandoned.

Saw Much of Alaska.

The President celebrated the Fourth of July in the United States and then started for Alaska on the U. S. transport Henderson. His Alaskan trip was extensive. He went the length of the new government railroad and visited the capital, Juneau, and the principal cities.

On his return trip Mr. Harding stopped off at Vancouver, creating precedent in that he was the first American President to step on Canadian soil.

The President arrived at Seattle July 27 and reviewed from the bridge of the Henderson a fleet of a dozen or so battleships under command of Admiral H. P. Jones, each of which gave him the national salute of twenty-one guns. Even then he was suffering from the ailment that resulted in his death, and soon after that the rest of his trip, which was to include a return to the East via the Panama canal, was cancelled.

President Harding made a public address at Seattle, setting forth his views on the Alaskan situation. Some of his points were these:

"Alaska for Alaskans."

"There is no need of government-managed, federally-paid-for hothouse development . . . there must be no reckless sacrificing of resources."

"Alaska is destined for statehood in a few years."

"Where there is possibility of betterment in federal machinery of administration, improvement should and will be effected."

Other conclusions presented by President Harding were:

That generous appropriation should be made for road building.

That the federal government should be more liberal in encouraging the technical, scientific and demonstration work in agriculture.

That restrictions should be laid on the fisheries and on the forests.

That the development of the coal mines must await time and economic conditions.

That the government should retain ownership and operation of the Alaskan railroad.

GLAD HE TACKLED JOB OF REPAIRING HIS ROOF

Cleveland Man Finds $2,000 Roll and Is Willing to Do Any Other Odd Jobs.

Cleveland.—When friend wife told C. J. Cleesattle there was a leak in the roof, he went out to look for a carpenter.

But carpenters were not to be had, and the first day went by with the roof still leaking.

M. Cleesattle kept on looking for several days, but no carpenters were available. Finally Mrs. Cleesattle mustered the nerve to ask him to repair the roof.

With the accustomed groan of husbands, he got a ladder, mounted to the roof, tore off several shingles, peered into the interior of the house, and between two rafters saw a bundle, tied with a cord.

Mr. Cleesattle undid the package. His eyes almost poped out of his head when a $50 bill was disclosed to view. Inside the bill were others. The total sum was about $2,000.

He almost fell off the roof in his hurry to get the money to the bank.

He had bought the home a few years ago. It is more than 50 years old. An owner in the past had concealed the money and probably died without revealing the hiding place.

Now Mr. Cleesattle declares firmly that whenever there are any jobs to do around the house, he is the man who will do them.

"Bad Man" Shoots Two Girls and Kills Self

Louisville, Ky.—William Zinsmeister, regarded as a desperate character, created havoc among nearly half a hundred persons enjoying themselves at a picnic given by a church club on the banks of the Ohio river by killing his daughter, fifteen; a girl companion, sixteen, and wounding another girl and two youths.

A few minutes later, on the point of being captured, he shot himself to death. Miss Sara Connelly was shot while near the river bank. She fell into the water and her body floated off down stream.

Armed with two revolvers and about 90 rounds of ammunition, Zinsmeister left his soft drink stand here and was driven to the scene of the picnic in a taxicab.

After only a few words with his daughter he began shooting. He fired 18 shots at the young people.

Zinsmeister, whose brother is serving a life term for murder, before leaving for the river, told his stepson-in-law, C. A. Luckert, "I am going to kill five kids this afternoon."

Zinsmeister's wife was burned to death several years ago.

Boy Bitten by Rattler Shows Presence of Mind

Lovington, N. M.—Through the exercise of rare presence of mind Charles Smith, sixteen-year-old son of C. A. Smith, saved his life when bitten by a rattlesnake a few days ago. He was herding sheep on the Highlonesome ranch when the reptile bit him. The boy had chased a rabbit into a prairie dog hole and ran his hand into the hole when a rattlesnake buried its fangs deep into his hand. As he jerked his hand from the hole he brought the snake with it, wrapped tightly around his forearm, retaining its hold on his hand. Killing the snake, then sucking the poison blood from his arm, he bound the arm tightly with a shoestring to keep the poison from getting into his body. He then walked three miles to the ranch of W. N. Johnson, where the ancient coal oil treatment was administered while preparations were being made to take him to town. Upon arrival at Lovington he was given medical attention and is getting along satisfactorily.

Doctor Dumped Soup Down Her Neck, Wife Declares

Chicago.—Drinking soup was a sort of rite for Dr. Abraham J. Weissmann, who wanted it just the right flavor and temperature so he could absorb large quantities at each gulp and get the full benefit.

His wife, Fahny, did her best to meet this requirement, but recently when Dr. Weissmann came home he found the soup too hot, except to swallow in limited quantities from a spoon or ladle.

"It's boiling hot," he shouted, and in a rage he poured a bowlful down his wife's neck, she says.

Mrs. Weissmann exhibited the hot soup scars in court and said this was but one of numerous cruelties. She said her husband was worth between $50,000 and $60,000, and that he had agreed to give her an $18,000 flat building in lieu of alimony. They had been divorced once before, and have a son twenty years old. The court indicated he would grant the second divorce.

Wife Preferred Freedom From Husband to Riches

Preferring freedom from her husband, Joseph, to $100,000, Mrs. Hazel Ford Wilson of Chicago has secured a divorce in Nevada.

Charles E. Ford, her father and a banker, left her $100,000 on condition that she continue to live with her husband.

MEN NOT GREATEST TALKERS

Tests Have Shown That the So-Called Sterner Sex Are More Reticent Than Their Sisters.

Normal women talk more but say less than normal men and have less creative imagination, while persons in the excited stage of "manic-depressive insanity" show greater capacity to create mental images than either normal men or women. So said Dr. Helge Lundholm of Waverly, Mass., to members of the American Psychiatric association at Detroit the other day, basing his statements on a comparative study made of creative imagination in normal and insane people.

Subjects were shown a perfectly meaningless picture for two minutes after it had been suggested to them that it represented meaningful objects. They were asked to report what they saw. In each sex of the normal people there was a type that said many words but few significant ones. Twice as many women as men belonged to this "normal talkative" type.

Normal men showed a greater tendency to see things in the picture that weren't there than did normal women, thus exhibiting more creative imagination, while the "manics" saw more than did either. Melancholics passed up the whole test with the phrase "I cannot."

DEATH CLAIMS PRESIDENT WITH NO WARNING

Apoplexy Strikes Harding Down in Midst of His Apparent Recovery.

END IS SHOCKINGLY SUDDEN

Doctors Believed Him Well on Road to Recovery—Mrs. Harding Reading to Him at Moment of Seizure—He Dies in Twenty Minutes—Devoted Wife Bears Up Heroically Under Grief.

Washington.—Warren G. Harding is dead. The body of the late president was speeded across the continent by special train for state burial in Washington. The final interment will be at Marion, Ohio.

The special train left San Francisco at 7 p. m. Friday, routed directly to the capital by way of Reno, Ogden, Cheyenne, Omaha and Chicago.

The train made no stops en route except those necessary for its operation. The body of the President was borne in the rear car. The car was lighted at night, and at all times two soldiers and two sailors, a part of a naval and military guard of sixteen enlisted men, stood at attention guarding the casket.

The train carried the presidential party as composed during the trip across the country to Alaska, and also General Pershing, Attorney General Daugherty, and Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Remsberg and family, Mrs. Remsberg being a sister of the President.

Untold thousands of American citizens stood with uncovered heads, day and night, as the train passed.

Through Nevada in the hours of daylight and darkness there were mourners at the stations. Utah contributed its thousands the next day. Wyoming's citizens mourned en masse. And so on, across the continent. At the cities, especially, large crowds assembled at the stations.

President Harding died of a stroke of apoplexy at 7:30 o'clock Thursday night (10:30 p. m., New York time). His exact age was fifty-seven years and nine months.

The end came suddenly while Mrs. Harding was reading to him from a magazine and after what had been called the best day he had had since the beginning of his illness exactly one week before.

Suddenly it was noticed that the President was shuddering and gasping. Mrs. Harding ran to him, but he was unable to respond to her inquiries. She then ran to the door of the sick room and called to the secret service men there to summon the President's physicians.

When General Sawyer reached the room the President was still alive, but he died almost at once.

Collapse Is Sudden.

In greater detail the facts of the death are related. With Mrs. Harding in the sickroom were two nurses. Due to the seeming improvement in the President's condition, members of his party, including the physicians who had remained in constant call, were confident they could leave the hotel for a few hours' relaxation. Many of them were at dinner.

Mrs. Harding, however, refusing to desert the post, was seated by the bedside, reading to her husband, when at 7:10 o'clock the President suddenly collapsed. His breathing, which had been quick ever since the illness overtook him, suddenly became spasmodic. Mrs. Harding, leaving the nurses to take whatever steps they could in the emergency, ran to the door of the presidential suite.

"Get the doctors," she called, as she ran part way into the almost deserted corridor. A secret service operative was seated about twenty feet down the hall. She hurriedly told the secret service man that the President had had a sudden and seemingly severe relapse, and begged the detective to try to locate Doctor Boone or any of the other physicians.

The secret service man took up the search for the physicians, while Mrs. Harding returned to the bedside. They located Doctor Sawyer at once.

Hoover Arrives Quickly.

Word of the President's sudden turn for the worse spread through the hotel and efforts were launched at once to try to locate the members of his official party.

Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce and one of the closest cabinet members to the President, was the first of the cabinet members to reach the bedside. He hurried into the corridor, already aware that the President's life was ebbing fast, and the door to the suite closed behind him. A short time after he came out. He was completely broken up and could not speak to the newspaper men as they gathered around him on his way down to his own quarters. Tears were running down his cheeks and he seemed to be stunned by grief as he made his way to the elevator.

Mayor James Rolph of San Francisco was the next to arrive, and he, too, after a visit to the death room, was inarticulate.

Official Statement.

It was about twenty minutes from the time Mr. Harding was stricken (7:10 p. m.) until he died (7:30). The circumstance is told briefly in the following formal announcement.

"The President died at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Harding and the two nurses, Miss Ruth Powderly and Miss Sue Drusser, were in the room at the time. Mrs. Harding was reading to the President when utterly without warning a slight shudder passed through his frame, he collapsed, and all recognized that the end had come. A stroke of apoplexy was the cause of his death.

"Within a few moments all of the President's official party had been summoned."

Dr. Boone said later that Miss Powderly looked at the President while Mrs. Harding was reading to him and was struck by a great improvement in the patient's appearance.

"Doesn't he look fine?" she said, turning to Mrs. Harding.

Then the nurse turned back to look at the President to verify her comment. Mrs. Harding looked, too. They saw a shudder pass over the sick man's frame. That marked the stroke that produced death.

The following telegram from the members of the cabinet who are here was immediately sent to Vice President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft, and those members of the cabinet who were not in San Francisco:

"The President died at 7:30 p. m. from a stroke of cerebral apoplexy. The end came peacefully and without warning.

"DAUGHERTY,
"WORK,
"WALLACE,
"HOOVER."

A Shocking Surprise.

Nothing could have been a more shocking surprise. But an hour earlier General Sawyer had been telling newspaper men that Mr. Harding had had the best day since he became seriously ill the preceding Saturday. He said that the President had definitely entered upon the stage of convalescence and that everything went to show that Mr. Harding was on the road to ultimate recovery.

The members of the official party—those who had accompanied the President and Mrs. Harding—had no warning that the President was in danger. They, like the newspaper men, had been assured that a fatal termination of the President's illness was a thing not to be expected, in view of his apparent improvement—the evident lessening of serious symptoms—in the last 48 hours.

George B. Christian, Jr., secretary to the President and his devoted friend, was in Los Angeles with Mrs. Christian. He had gone there at the President's solicitation to read at a Masonic gathering an address which the President had prepared in the expectation that he would deliver it in person.

The newspaper men had an engagement with General Sawyer for 8 o'clock. He was to tell them then how the President was progressing toward recovery.

Regarding the manner in which Mrs. Harding sustained the shock, an official statement given to the press by Judson D. Welliver of the White House staff, a member of the President's official party, said:

"Mrs. Harding, who from the beginning of the President's illness had expressed complete confidence in his recovery, did not break down. On the other hand, she continued, as from the beginning, the bravest member of the group. When it was realized that the President had actually passed away, she turned to those in the room, whose concern had turned to her, and said: 'I am not going to break down.'"

COOLIDGE TAKES UP HIS DUTIES AS PRESIDENT

His Venerable Father Administers the Oath of Office in Country Home.

ASKS CABINET TO REMAIN

Announces His Intention to Follow Out the Policies Inaugurated by Harding—Goes to Washington to Assume Duties.

Washington.—Calvin Coolidge, thirtieth President of the United States, is here in Washington at the head of the executive branch of the government. Like the 100 per cent efficient United States marines, he has the situation well in hand. The presidency is functioning without friction.

Calvin Coolidge took the oath as President of the United States at Plymouth, Vt., at 2:47 a. m. Friday, August 3. The ceremony took place in the living room of the residence of the new President's father, John C. Coolidge. The oath of office was administered by the father, who is a notary public. The text of the presidential oath had been telephoned to Mr. Coolidge at Plymouth from the White House.

Statement by New Chief.

President Coolidge received the news of the death of President Harding and of his own elevation to the presidency at ten minutes before midnight, standard time, Thursday.

Mr. Coolidge received the first news through telegrams from George C. Christian, Jr., secretary to President Harding.

Mr. Coolidge issued the following statement:

"Reports have reached me, which I fear are correct, that President Harding is gone. The world has lost a great and good man. I mourn his loss. He was my chief and my friend. It will be my purpose to carry out the policies which he has begun for the service of the American people and for meeting their responsibilities wherever they may arise.

"For this purpose, I shall seek the co-operation of all those who have been associated with the President during his term of office. Those who have given their efforts to assist him I wish to remain in office, that they may assist me.

"I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation."

The following telegram was sent to Mrs. Harding:

"Plymouth, Vt., Aug. 3, 1923.

"Mrs. Warren G. Harding, San Francisco, Cal.: We offer you our deepest sympathy. May God bless you and keep you.

"CALVIN COOLIDGE,
"GRACE COOLIDGE."

Message Tells of Death.

The telegram announcing the death of the President was as follows:

"Palace hotel, San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 3, 1923.—Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Plymouth, Vt.: The President died, instantaneously and without warning, while conversing with members of his family, at 7:30 p. m. His physicians report that death was apparently due to some brain embolism, probably an apoplexy.

"GEORGE B. CHRISTIAN, JR.,
"Secretary."

This telegram was brought to the Coolidge home at Plymouth Notch by W. A. Perkins of Bridgewater, who owns the telephone line running from Bridgewater to Plymouth. About five minutes later newspaper men arrived in Ludlow.

A drive of thirty miles through the mountains brought them to the Coolidge summer home.

Mr. Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge had retired about an hour before the death messages were received. Ten minutes after the arrival of the newspaper men Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge came downstairs into the sitting room of the Coolidge home. Mr. Coolidge was dressed in a black sack suit and wore a black necktie. Mrs. Coolidge wore a black and white gown, white shoes and stockings. Mr. Coolidge was very pale and showed deep regret for President Harding's death. He seated himself at a table, while Mrs. Coolidge brought a lamp and read the telegrams he had received.

He then called his assistant secretary, Irwin Geisser, and dictated to him his statement and the telegram to Mrs. Harding.

Mrs. Coolidge Weeps.

In the meantime people were arriving from all directions. Mr. Coolidge, seeing the house becoming crowded, gave orders that an adjoining house be opened for use as press headquarters.

Meanwhile, the new first lady of the land sat weeping softly and exclaiming in sympathy for the bereaved first lady in San Francisco.

"What a blow—what a terrible blow to poor Mrs. Harding," she said. "She had had such a heavy burden, in her own illness, to bear up under—and now this!"

Finally Secretary Geisser returned with the press copies of the statements, and pushing back the old photograph album and the family Bible on the center table, Mrs. Coolidge busied herself with the work of helping distribute them.

The newspaper men had scarcely gotten out of sight when another telegraph messenger arrived with a copy of the presidential oath from Washington. In the same sitting room with its hand-braided rugs, its clutter of venerable colonial furniture, its old wood stove and its family Bible—Calvin Coolidge received the oath of office from his father, and became America's thirtieth president.

PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

Calvin Coolidge is a quiet, taciturn man, known to his friends as "Silent Cal."

For more than twenty years prior to his election as vice president he had been in political life, starting almost immediately after finishing college. His first political office was in the city council of Northampton, Mass., where he had settled. For years he held various offices in that city, including those of city solicitor and mayor; then he was elected to the Massachusetts house of representatives. Later he won a seat in the state senate and was its president.

Coolidge was lieutenant governor of Massachusetts and in 1919 was elected to the governorship in the first campaign won by the Republican party in several years. He was governor for two years. It was during this term he during his term as governor that he first attained nation-wide prominence. This was in connection with the policemen's strike in Boston. He took firm control of the situation, ordered the state guard to patrol the streets, and kept down rioting, taking the stand that law and order must be preserved. The strike was a complete failure. Following his action in this situation he was nicknamed "Law and Order" Coolidge.

He was mentioned as a possibility for the presidential nomination prior to the 1920 campaign, but he made a public announcement that he would not consider the nomination. His nomination and election to the vice presidency followed.

In Washington Mr. Coolidge has been ranked as a clear thinker, careful in speech, a fair mixer—as aggressive as any vice president can be.

MADE WAY THROUGH WINDOW

Ex-Secretary Redfield Recalls Happening Which Prominent Personages Might Desire to Forget.

So far as his heavy cares permitted, President Wilson showed keen interest in the progress and development of department work of every kind.

During the war an inventor produced an all-metal airplane of which he expected great things. It was sent to the bureau of standards for examination. The President was asked to see it, and gladly consented, but the only time available was on a Sunday.

Accompanied by Mrs. Wilson, we went out to the bureau of standards, only to find that the custodian had misunderstood his orders and we were locked out. A hasty search found an unfastened window, and this served as a sufficient entrance for the President and his wife.

I have always enjoyed the recollection of the President of the United States and the first lady of the land climbing in through a half-opened window rather than fail to carry out the purpose of their visit.—William C. Redfield, in the Outlook.

Magnetic Alloys.

It is generally understood that the only substances that are magnetic, or may be magnetized, are a certain natural magnet, called loadstone, and iron. There are certain manganese alloys, however, which are magnetic, called the Heusler alloys, so named after their discoverer, Dr. Heusler. They are composed of copper, manganese and aluminum and are remarkable for the fact that in certain proportions they are magnetic, although the component metals are not magnetic. Doctor Heusler made the discovery by accident. He was turning a metal alloy containing manganese in a lathe, when he noticed that the turnings adhered to the tool.

Fight Engine Resistance.

Builders of the "bat-wing" airplane designed the craft to overcome the resistance of struts, wires and fuselage that in the usual type of machine consume almost three-quarters of the engine power, says the Washington Star. The improved design is a great double-chambered aerofoil that terminates at right and left in the conventional ailerons and that tapers in the rear to a tail that has the usual elevator and rudder. The aerofoil measures 100 feet from tip to tip and swells in the front to a thickness of seven feet. In that bulge is a cabin 30 feet long, eight feet wide and six feet in height. This plane is an internally trussed cantilever structure covered with wood veneer so tough that the wing surfaces can be walked upon.

An Interesting Life of a Good Seaman Ended on Monday.

Capt. George P. Runkle, a native of Bellefonte and known widely throughout Centre County as a man with a most pleasing personality, of wide vision and quick, keen judgment, died on Monday morning at 1 o'clock at the Devitts camp, a health resort, near Watsontown. Mr. Runkle had been in feeble health for the past year, suffering from tuberculosis. He came to Bellefonte in October, 1922, and spent five months here and at Centre Hall. He then went to Devitts camp and had since been there, gradually becoming weaker.

The deceased was born in Bellefonte 48 years ago, a son of Captain and Mrs. Michael Runkle, both deceased. He is survived by his widow, whom he married in Bridgeport, Conn., four years ago; and by two brothers, M. B. and J. L. Runkle, both of Bellefonte. Funeral services were held yesterday afternoon from the Brachbill home on Spring street, services being in charge of the Masons and Elks, the deceased having been a member in good standing in both orders. Interment was made in the Union cemetery.

The life of Captain Runkle was a very interesting one. Receiving his early education in the local schools, he was placed on the Pennsylvania Nautical School Ship Saratoga and graduated from this ship. He loved the ways of the sea and those who man the ships that operate over it, touching on many shores and so he followed during his lifetime the alluring voice of the waves, winning friends in hundreds of ports and gaining distinction as an able seaman.

After graduating from the Saratoga, he served on American Line steamers until the Spanish—American war, when he served for his country under the very popular Admiral Sigsbee, being with him in several very thrilling experiences.

Following the war, he returned to the Ship Saratoga and served as an officer, eventually becoming commander of the Pennsylvania Nautical School Ship Adams, being the first to be made commander of one of the Nautical School ships when not a graduate of Annapolis. During the World war he commanded boats from the Great Lakes to Salt Water, finally taking charge of food ships that carried supplies through the submarine zone to France and Italy.

After the World war he commanded ships operating between New York harbor and ports in South Africa and Australia, making some of the most interesting of all his trips. His return loads from the African and Australian ports generally included a number of wild animals for zoos in various cities in the United States. So many animals were included in one ship load that the trip was referred to as Noah's Ark on a voyage across the ocean.

In all his travels, Capt. Runkle seemed not to change in disposition, remaining always a pleasant companion, a good mixer and in his dealings with others more willing to have everything satisfactory to the other fellow than to dispute, it being said of him that frequently he paid for others faults rather than argue.

OVER THE COUNTY

A new gasoline pump has been installed at the Breon garage in Millheim.

Homer Keen was permitted to return to his home in Penn Township after spending ten weeks in the hospital, much improved in health.

Because there is not enough wheat in Penn's valley to keep the McMullin mill at Millheim stocked, a carload of Ohio grain was received last week.

Eels galore were caught one day last week at the Millheim mill. The wheel was not operated over Sunday until Tuesday morning and did not turn when the miller went to start the machinery. An investigation revealed that it was clogged with eels. A tubful of the eels were caught.

The old sawmill located on the Motz property at the west end of Woodward was taken away recently and the removal made a decided improvement to the town. A substantial guard rail was placed along the road, where the mill stood, to lessen danger of serious automobile accidents.

Threshing season has started and the wheat is said to be threshing well.

The Coburn band added a large helicon bass horn and a new bass drum to their instruments last week.

Huckleberries, late variety, and blackberries, are reported an unusually large crop since the recent rains.

The Stover and Meyer families reunion will be held on Saturday in Winkleblech's grove, east of Aaronsburg.

Claud Dutrow, of Centre Hall, claims the record for using gas in a trip from Lewistown to Centre Hall. His Ford car refused to start when he stopped for a minute after reaching the parental home and his dad said, "Have you got gas?" "Just got her filled before I started from Lewistown," was the casual reply. But when the trouble could not be located the cap was taken from the gas tank and the rule showed the gas was all gone. The tank was dry. Further inspection revealed that the cut-off screw on the carburetor had been lost and that the gas had leaked away on the trip.

VACCINATION DEPUTIES

Physicians in Centre County Will Revaccinate Free.

Dr. J. L. Seibert, county medical director, has been notified by the state secretary of health, Dr. Charles H. Miner, that the following county physicians have been appointed as official deputies to revaccinate free of charge, school children who have undergone two or more unsuccessful attempts at vaccination against smallpox. The appointees are:

Dr. George H. Woods, Pine Grove Mills.
Dr. C. S. Musser, Aaronsburg.
Dr. H. S. Braucht, Spring Mills.
Dr. E. H. Harris, Snow Shoe.
Dr. L. E. Kidder, State College.
Dr. W. J. Kurtz, Howard.
Dr. David Dale, Bellefonte.
Dr. Robert Jackson, Osceola Mills.

School children living in the rural districts who have been twice unsuccessfully vaccinated, or those who had been admitted to school last term on an official temporary certificate must be revaccinated by the county medical director, or one of these official deputies, who will grant the temporary certificate which will admit them to school for the current school year. In cities, boroughs, or townships of the first class having organized boards of health, this official revaccination must be performed by the board of health physician.

Teachers or school principals are not allowed to admit children to school unless they present, or have already filed a certificate of successful vaccination, or in the case of unsuccessful results the official temporary certificate, which must have been issued since June 1st, at which time temporary certificates issued during the previous school term became void.

The county medical director has pointed out the fact that school teachers must be careful in demanding proper vaccination certificates. A certificate stating that a child has been vaccinated is not sufficient. The vaccination physician must certify that an examination of the child made not less than eight days after vaccination disclosed a vaccination scar, or cicatrix indicating a successful vaccination. If this vaccination cicatrix is not in evidence, the physician cannot legally certify, and the child must be revaccinated.

The Supreme Court in Lee vs March 203 Pennsylvania, Page 351, has ruled that it is obligatory to use the vaccination certificate forms prescribed by the state department of health. These forms are furnished free of charge to all physicians practicing in the second class townships, and any other form cannot legally be accepted by the teacher or principal.

Citing the law, it is also explained that teachers may not accept certificates issued by the family physician or school medical inspectors exempting pupils from vaccination because of an alleged physical disability. Cases of actual physical disability for vaccination are rare. Generally speaking, any child that is well enough to go to school is a fit subject for vaccination. If physical disability is claimed, such cases must be passed upon by the county medical director or one of the officials above named.

School medical inspectors are directed by the secretary of health to verify the existence of the required vaccination cicatrix and pass upon the validity of vaccination certificates filed.

Mr. Harding

It is natural that the death of the President of the United States should cause universal sorrow. But Mr. Harding was more than President. He had in large measure the qualities of heart that drew men to him; he was kindly, sympathetic, human—A wise and capable leader whom the people trusted.

In homely speech, he was a good man.

We need such men in high places.

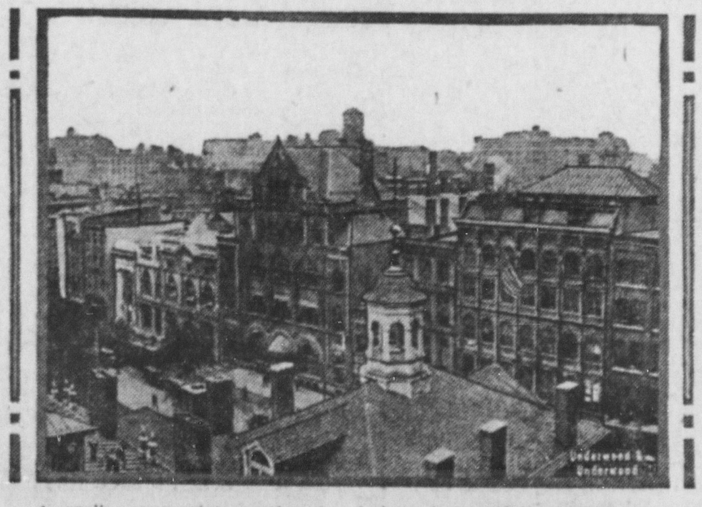
Plan for Independence Hall Park



A really appropriate setting for Independence Hall, Philadelphia, a project that has been advanced—and shelved—several times within the last decade, will be provided in the next few years, if plans outlined by the Society of Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence at their congress in Philadelphia are realized. It was suggested that the forty-eight states unite in purchasing all the properties on Chestnut street between Fifth and Sixth streets, razing the buildings and presenting the ground to the city to be used forever as a public square. This photograph gives an excellent panorama view of the proposed site of the park, showing the buildings facing Independence Hall (shown at extreme right) that would be razed under the new proposal.

Ancient Glass and Pottery

British Museum Acquires Collection of Roman Remains Found in Buckinghamshire.

London.—The trustees of the British museum at a meeting approved the acquisition of a number of valuable and interesting specimens of glass and pottery, medals and plaquettes, some of which were gifts to the museum and others purchases recently made.

Prominent among these additions is the collection of Roman glass, pottery and other objects discovered in January in the parish of Radnage in Buckinghamshire. This is the generous gift of Mr. W. Gordon Ross, the owner of the property in which the discovery was made. It was fully described in a lecture by Mr. Clement O. Skilbeck, local secretary for Buckinghamshire of the Society of Antiquaries of London, at a meeting of that society.

Perhaps the finest piece of this collection is a shallow glass bowl, a superb example of what is commonly known as "pillar molded." The color is a rich blue variegated with white ornamentation. It is the only perfect example of this kind of bowl known to have been found in this country, although fragments have occurred. This is the sumptuous kind of glass which some have thought represents the "Murrhine" glass mentioned by Pliny. It was probably made in Alexandria or perhaps in Rome.

Ancient Plaquettes.

The museum has also acquired a number of Renaissance plaquettes from the recent Rosenheim sale. All of these are rare types or examples, and one or two unique. One specimen, which represents Bellerophon, is attributed to Francesco di Giorgio (early Sixteenth century); another, a personification of music, is from north Italy (about A. D. 1500); a third, representing the Antinous of the Belvedere—the statue discovered in 1543—was executed shortly after (about 1550). These three, all made of bronze, are the gift of Sir Hercules Read.

The purchases include four German plaquettes of a rare kind, with figures of the virtues (Nuremberg, 1551), an example of exceptional size, "The Adoration of the Magi," dated 1561, probably by a Spanish artist after Parmigianino; another signed by Caraglio; and another with a Madonna and Saints, Paduan, under the influence of Mantegna, and another Paduan plaquette with a satyr and nymph (Fifteenth century). All the above are additions to the department of British and medieval antiquities.

The department of ceramics has acquired from the Rosenheim collection about forty-three pieces, including several very important examples of Continental faience. Among these is a fine Berlin dish, 15 inches in diameter, dated 1706, painted in blue in Chinese style; another piece is a tureen of Hochst faience. There are several examples of Strasburg faience, a very rare Ansbach plate enameled in colors in the Chinese famille verte style, and a very interesting jug and cover painted with children in pink, made at Sceaux Penthievre, France.

Coins and Medals.

In the department of coins and medals the medals acquired by purchase from the Rosenheim collection number 148 pieces. Among the more interesting are:

A fine specimen of the rare medal of Ercole I. d'Este, duke of Ferrara, signed by Lodovico Corradini of Modena, and dated 1472. On the reverse is Hercules, with three pillars (instead of the traditional two). Purchased with the assistance of Mr. W. H. Woodward. A powerful portrait of Lucrezia Borgia, daughter of Pope Alexander VI and wife (in 1502) of Alfonso I. d'Este, afterward duke of Ferrara. This piece, which was probably made on the occasion of the marriage, is sometimes found with a portrait of her husband attached.

A bronze gilt medal of Bramante, the architect of St. Peter's, by the Milanese medallist and jeweler, Caradosso. It was made in Rome about 1506, and is mentioned by Vasari as the work of Caradosso. On the reverse is a figure of Architecture, holding square and compasses, with St. Peter's in the background. A rare, possibly unique, medal of Neri Capponi, the son of the Florentine historian, Gino, and himself ambassador to France in 1494-5. The work is Florentine, about 1500, but the portrait and the figure of Hope on the reverse seem to be by different hands. A curious medal of a lady who is described as Androdama Dia. On the reverse is a sea monster chained to a rock, with the inscription, Varium nomen et opus ("a different name and a different deed").

Plans Unique Memorial to World War Heroes

Oakland, Cal.—Names of 84,324 heroes who died in the World war, today repose in a vault in the allied memorial center here. The memorial, a majestic monument of steel and stone, was erected on the banks of Lake Merritt, in the heart of Oakland, for the purpose of holding the names of every allied soldier, sailor or nurse killed in the World war.

Dr. Leroy F. Herrick of Oakland, who erected and maintains the memorial at his own expense, states that in time he hopes to have the names of every participant of the World war in the huge vault of the allied memorial center.

Dr. Herrick stated that the Canadian authorities have promised to supply a complete list of the soldier and sailor dead of Canada.

"I do not know how long it is going to take me to get the names of the 1,500,000 soldier dead of France," said Dr. Herrick. "The French authorities have not finished compiling the list. I expect to have the Australian and New Zealand lists in time for next Armistice day, but I do not know how long it will take to get complete lists from England, Belgium, Italy and other allies.

"The names in the vault today are all American, with the exception of 145 of Brazil's war dead."

The monument has the portraits of Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt and Wilson carved on the four sides, and is topped by an eagle.

End Thefts at American Ports

U. S. Department of Commerce Plans to Open Pilfering Prevention Bureaus.

Washington.—The Department of Commerce plans to suppress pilfering at American ports. Theft-prevention bureaus will be established at New York, San Francisco and other important places.

In making this announcement the department explained that the losses from theft constitute a heavy tax on our export trade.

The transportation division of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce during the last six months has been making a special study of the best method of export packing, a subject which for some years has been a matter of increasing concern to the exporters of the country and to the bureau. This investigation has been conducted at the request of the house committee on merchant marine and fisheries.

Many large industrial centers in the United States have been visited in order to get at first hand modern ideas on packing and pilfering prevention. While proper packing will do much to prevent theft and pilferage, it does not entirely solve the problem. Skilled thieves, well organized, are able to remove goods from packing cases without leaving any trace of the robbery, and the loss is not discovered until the case is opened on its arrival at destination.

Separate Investigations.

In following up these losses the marine insurance companies, the steamship owners and the rail carriers carry on their separate investigations. In other words, there has been little coordination of effort, each interested element making its own fight against the evil.

It is for this reason that the transportation division suggested the establishment of a central bureau of information at each of the principal ports so that there might be an exchange of information which would simplify the work of the investigators and strengthen their efforts so that a united, collaborative effort could be made to check this spreading menace.

This idea met with the utmost approval of the various interests involved and at a recent meeting in New York, the transportation division was asked to assist in the formation of such a bureau for that port to be supported by the marine underwriters, the steamship companies, the railway lines, and the shippers' organizations, all of which would be benefited by its activities. A committee was formed on June 28 at the customs house in New York to devise ways and means for establishing such a bureau, and its organization is assured at an early date.

It is expected that similar organizations will be formed at each of the large ports so that before long the pilferers will be convinced that it will be poor policy to tamper with interstate and foreign shipments.

Klein Explains.

Director Klein of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce explained:

"Perhaps one of the main reasons why this evil has grown is the fact that it has been difficult to obtain convictions in the local courts. Even when a trained investigator discovers the stolen goods in the possession of a 'fence' or catches an employee in the act of stealing, there is great difficulty in absolutely identifying the merchandise, and without such identification, conviction is impossible. The Carlin act, which seeks to provide penalties for the pilferage of goods moving in interstate commerce, provides penalties only for the stealing of baggage from a public truck or van, neither freight nor express matter being specifically provided for.

"It is evident that the federal legislation on the subject should be amended if the full usefulness of such a central bureau of information is to be attained.

"It is understood that an effort will be made to secure amendments to the Carlin act so as to provide specific penalties for stealing from interstate shipments loaded on trucks or stored in warehouses with the hope that this will have a marked effect in reducing pilferage losses."

Sea Adventures Smack of Crusoe

News of the Day Brings Tales Equal to Most Imaginative of Fiction Stories.

New York.—Within two days of one another, two tales of seafarers' daring have come clicking over the cables, bringing a moment's tang of adventure to newspaper readers.

The stories were those of the departure of the 45-foot yacht Sowitasgoth from Hamburg for New York via Funchal, and of the suffering of the crew of the British steamship Trevessa—sixteen and eighteen men in two small boats, voyaging 2,000 miles in the open sea, after their vessel foundered in the Indian ocean.

There are daring and hardship of different sorts in both these stories of stout hearts. To the town dweller they bring wonderment and the tribute of admiration beneath the landsman's sense of superiority in his security. But to the men who know the sea these are not things smacking of the phenomenal—they are a part of the day's work, some of the chances taken by every man jack.

In taverns in many ports you can hear stories of men in cockleshell boats which make one wonder what is the limit to the prodigies of suffering that can be undergone by the human animal. Two thousand miles, three thousand, four thousand, in boats laden to the gunwales with men; no water save rain; five days' food stretched out to fifty; heat that maddens, nights worse than the glaring days—and yet victory at last. A thousand romances have been written about such things, but of them all there is not one that approaches the stark reality.

The Centaur, the Pandora, the Bounty's boat and the Saginaw's gig, the survivors of the Essex, which was rammed and sunk by a south Pacific whale in 1820—these are but chapter headings in a romance that has no end.

Of Another Category.

The yacht Sowitasgoth, with her crew of three who hope to finish by mid-August the first voyage of the kind from a German port to New York, is of another category. Yet this alone, for all the implication of pleasure in the word yacht, has its heroisms and daring. Last February six white men set out from China in a twenty-seven ton yacht, the Shanghai, bound for Copenhagen on a ten-month voyage. Their route alone calls up romance—Amoy, Batavia, the Sunda straits, Rodriguez (where the Trevessa's boats landed the other day), Mauritius and Madagascar—the names alone call up the glint of sun on breaking waves and the sheen of palms.

An 18-ton yawl, the Mollie Lou, made the 2,000-mile trip from Honolulu to San Francisco in 27 days a few years ago.

In some of these voyages cannibalism becomes more than a jingler's jest.

The Medusa is the classic of this sort, less perhaps from the disaster itself than from its celebration in Gericault's painting, a picture considered excellent in its day and still as big a drawing card in the Louvre as "Washington Crossing the Delaware" in galleries nearer the subway.

The Medusa was wrecked off the west coast of Africa on July 2, 1816. A raft was thrown together; 149 men crowded aboard. Twelve days later it was picked up in mid-ocean by a British brig. There were fifteen survivors left. Of the others, some had drowned.

Five Men in a Blow.

Typhoon, trade, sirocco, monsoon—all the winds figure in the tales of small boats. In the case of the Saginaw's gig it was the Kona, bringing rain, thunder and lightning off the cliffs of the Hawaiian group. The Kona raged when the gig's five men were worn out. William Halford was the sole survivor. He died only a year ago.

In 1870 the Saginaw, a small naval ship, went to Ocean island, 1,700 miles beyond Hawaii, to look for castaways and verify the isle's position. The Saginaw hit the reef and all hands crawled to the sandbank which is the island, a few feet high at most.

A 22-foot whaleboat was fitted up as a gig and decked. Lieutenant J. G. Talbot took command. Halford and three others volunteered. Storms held up their departure. At last the Saginaw's captain called all hands to prayer and the gig set out for Honolulu.

Navigation was difficult. There was food for five for 30 days—on quarter rations. Beans from the Saginaw, dried in the sun, had been canned, but they fermented. All but Halford became ill. The beans were jettisoned. The five fell back on desiccated potatoes, three spoonfuls a day, then two, mixed with the fresh water aboard as ballast. Five days out the gig lost her lantern. Halford tried mixing the lantern's sperm oil, a five-gallon supply, with the potatoes. The others couldn't stand it. He could, and lived.

In twenty-five days the last of the provisions was gone. Three days later Halford knocked a booby bird on the head. It made five portions, raw, with the blood. The next meal came two days later—a flying-fish fell on the deck.

Pass Land in Night.

A day or two after that Halford, awaking, saw land astern. They had passed it in the night. The men were done up; some were dying. The gig was leaking. A log four feet in diameter all but sank them. Then the Kona broke.

Halford, best of them all physically, dozed again. A cry awoke him—"Surf ahead." A mistaken order from the dying lieutenant and the gig veered and was bowled over in the surf.

Halford held fast. The boat rode clear. She righted. He heard a groan. One other man had come through. He was caught in an air pocket under the deck. But he was insane. Halford got him through the surf, and with him the tin box containing official dispatches. Halford reached a footing and collapsed. Hours later he recovered, his feet still in the water, but his head on land. His one companion was dead.

Of the many dots on the Pacific charts one is Lisiansky island, bearing the name of a Russian captain who bumped the isle in 1805. Thirty-nine years later the American whaler Holder Borden, Captain Pell, of Fall River, wedged in the reef. No lives were lost and the crew salvaged more supplies than Robinson Crusoe saved. They started gardens, hunted birds and turtles, stored up brackish water—there was plenty of it, through some freak of nature, though five months brought only twelve hours of rain. Also, they fashioned saws of hoop iron, and in those five months built a 35-ton copper-fastened schooner, the Hope. With 24 men aboard and 11 left to guard the $30,000 worth of salvage, the Hope sailed the thousand miles or more to Honolulu in 24 days, and was sold there for $1,400.

Lost on Reef.

Another Robinson Crusoe schooner was that built by survivors of the Hermes. Two British whalers, the Hermes and the Pearl, were lost ten miles apart in 1822 on the reef that bears their names. A whaler picked up the survivors in a short time, but twelve stayed with James Robinson, who had started building a schooner. They took their chances—and arrived at Honolulu all but starved, after ten weeks at sea.

In 1806 two Kanakas saw a small boat off the Hawaiian coast. They swam out, shook hands all round with the fifteen thin strangers aboard, and, still swimming, guided the boat through the breakers. The fifteen were the survivors of the clipper ship Hornet, New York for San Francisco, which flared up like a match—a wooden ship filled with oil—a thousand miles south of Cape St. Lucas, Lower California, and 2,500 miles from Hawaii.

There had been three boats—two quarter boats and the long boat, in which a hole, stove in in the lowering, was plugged with blankets and shirts and kept plugged till the end. Captain Josiah A. Mitchell took a mate, two passengers and eleven seamen in the long boat and towed the other two boats. Twenty-one days out he had to let the smaller boats go by themselves. They cut adrift with good cheer. Night came and separation. The other two were never heard of again.

Made Boots Into Mush.

There were flying-fish for the long boat and booby birds, dolphins and a bonita and a turtle. But before the Kanakas shook hands, on the forty-third day, the fifteen had gnawed the bare bones of a ham, had eaten the canvas wrapping of the ham, had made their boots into mush, had devoured their handkerchiefs. Four bony flying-fish made them a feast; one more was caught the next day, the fortieth day, but all hands made the captain, worst of the lot, take it himself.

When he left the clipper, Captain Mitchell headed for the American group, a sprinkling of isles on the charts, in latitude 17 north, longitude 133:30 west. They made this position—and found no land. Hawaii was the nearest. The supposed land was one of the mistakes which even today show on Pacific charts with the notation "E. D.," existence doubtful.

There was a corking good news story written of this voyage when the survivors got to Honolulu. The writer, a young reporter, made the Coast papers pay $100 a column for it. He was Mark Twain, then only Sam Clemens.

Pitcairn island, inhabited now by descendants of castaways, has annals that stand alone. In 1789 the crew of the British navy ship Bounty mutinied near Tahiti. The commander, Lieutenant Bligh, once with Captain Cook, was set adrift with eighteen men. Their 23-foot boat was so laden that a fair swell was a crisis. They had food for five days at ordinary rations. Yet Bligh took his boat westward 3,618 miles in fifty days.

Mutineers Separate.

The mutineers separated; sixteen at Tahiti built a schooner; the others went to Pitcairn with the Bounty, which they burnt, and settled down.

Two years later the warship Pandora was sent to get those at Tahiti. On the way home she was wrecked and four of the prisoners and thirty-one of the crew of eighty-nine were lost. The survivors filled four small boats. They rowed and sailed 1,100 miles in eleven days, making Timor island, where Bligh had landed.

Some of the Pitcairn islanders passed through America during the war, going to the front. It was 1808, however, before the colony of mutineers' descendants was found.

Christian, the mutineers' leader, is one of the men who cannot die. After years, when the mutiny case had been forgotten save in admiralty records, one of Bligh's followers saw a man in London. He looked like Christian. The man caught a curious glance—and ran. Perhaps. The Pacific is prolific of mysteries.

Men today need not face the terrors of small-boat voyages. The Trevessa, with her tale from the Indian ocean is still fresh in the news. The sea remains the sea.—New York Times.

Judge Finds Arm for "Crippled" Beggar

Judge Jesse Siberman of New York city is the greatest of "miracle men" — he recently found a whole arm for a "crippled beggar."

James Cushing, with an empty sleeve stuck in his coat pocket, appeared for sentence.

"If I had both arms I could earn a living," he pleaded. "But I'm only a poor old cripple."

"Take off that man's coat," the judge ordered.

It was done, and presto—the beggar had a fine husky arm strapped to his body. Now he is serving 30 days in jail to practice working his "new" arm.

"Red Heads" Becoming Rare, Scientist States

Washington.—The blonde girl has become a subject of scientific research. Included in the annual report of the Smithsonian institution, recently made public, is a serious, scientific paper by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of the United States national museum, dealing with the color of the eyes, hair and skin of 2,000 men and women members of old American families.

The real blonde, Dr. Hrdlicka finds, is a rare object, but far rarer still are the true redheads, and most rare of all is the absolute brunette. Among men and women he found little difference in the frequency of blondes and brunettes, but there are five red-headed women to two red-headed men.

One out of every sixteen men has real blonde hair; one out of every 50 has red hair; one out of every 100 has hair that is truly black.

One of every 14 women has blonde hair; one out of every 20 women has red hair; one out of 100 has solid black hair.

Those in between are in the majority—the mousy browns, the dishwater grays and those with no hair at all.

One in every 200 men has pure white skin, whereas one in fifty women can claim that distinction.
